'5 Whys' is not an effective tool to use to determine systemic/process problems with an event/incident. Although for certain situations it does work - the example is probably not a good example. There is also a question about the definition of root cause. Root Cause for 5 Whys is the same as immediate cause for TapRoot.

The conflict is unsolvable. We can continue to poke Kiev handouts in the calculation of "solve the problem", only it won't be solved. Going to a trial is also pointless: for a number of European countries this is a political issue, and they will make a decision clearly in whose favor. What to do in this situation is an open question.
