Tim Cahill's first collection of adventure travel writing is maybe his best, curated mainly from his work at Outside Magazine. The title, Jaguars Ripped My Flesh, is meant to be sarcastic; Cahill produces stories on adventure travel for normal people, written from the point of view of a real person who experiences real fears and doubts. He clearly loves his job though, and he makes it very easy for one to be swept up by his curiosity and love of a thrill.

Jaguars Ripped My Flesh: Cahill, Tim: 9780679770794: Books ...

Comprised of thirty stories under separate and appropriate divisions, Jaguars Ripped My Flesh is not all bold-faced humour in light of death-defying adventure, although there's plenty of that. The author offers us a compelling take on many things seen in the course of his travels, from ecological rape in Mexico to his dark account of the aftermath of the eruption of Mount Saint Helens.
