Folk tales contain a variety of different story types, and Andersen tried his hand at a great many of them. The ones that stick most in my mind are those tales from the nursery—The Ugly Duckling, what you might call an early road story, The Princess on the Pea, a fairy tale, and The Emperor's New Clothes, a pure fable. He was sucker for royalty, by all accounts, but the element that makes the Princess story work so well as a fairy story is its humour.
